Pamela's lifelong love and curiosity of wildlife and her successful professional insurance career joined forces in 2019 with a move out of California to the wilds of Central Oregon where she began respectively stalking bobcats and beavers by trail cameras. Finding the local beaver-conservation experts at Beavers Works Oregon, she aligned her skills to the mission of supporting more beavers on the landscape for watershed ecosystem health while supporting people's need to protect their property. Earnestly improving her trail camera monitoring methods, she continues to uncover the elusive colonies of beavers dwelling under the backyard patios of a growing human community around Bend. These "desert beavers" surviving in the swift flows of the Deschutes River is a revelation for a new kind of risk management for both humans and beavers. She began her BeaverCorps. training in 2020 and is ready for opportunities to work with homeowners and landowners to bring proven coexistence tools to conflict situations whether flooding pastures, ponds, or tree felling. Meanwhile she continues working trail camera magic and enjoying using her San Francisco State University's Conceptual and Fine Arts Majors by mixing the perfect sand paint color to match client's trees.
