Malcolm is the Voluntary Stewardship Program Coordinator with Foster Creek Conservation District in Douglas County, Washington. He became passionate about beavers and wetland restoration while earning his Masters in Environmental Management degree from Western Colorado University. Before that, he was a Peace Corps volunteer in Panama where he specialized in aquaculture systems, and holds a bachelor's degree from UT Austin. Malcolm is dedicated to finding win-win solutions that improve the health and resiliency of water systems in the American West and of the communities that depend on them. He is eager to apply his non-lethal conflict resolution skills and knowledge to the Wenatchee Valley.

Note, Malcolm Macleod received training from the Beaver Institute as a Beaver Wetland Professional, and is a member in good standing in the Beaver Institute's International BeaverCorps Association.
